

President Anwar Sadat's recent visit to Washington. The Sudanese state news agency quoted the Egyptian Vice-President as saying that his discussions with Numeiry concentrated "on the current signs of a (Soviet-Cuban) Communist advance in Africa."

The Egyptian sea war games nevertheless underlined Cairo's intensification of military exercises along various frontlines with Israel. This week's was the second major exercise to be announced in the past few days. The Egyptian Middle East News Agency (MENA) had earlier carried a military bandout saying that war games supported by Egyptian and Soviet warships in the Red Sea were staged last month "somewhere along the frontline" with Israel.

The Egyptian military exercises paralleled war games staged recently by Syria.

As alarming as they may be, these intensive exercises were seen by Middle East observers as reflecting the Egyptian and Syrian quest to dramatise the situation anew with the aim of pressuring U.S. President Jimmy Carter into breaking the Middle East stalemate.

Sadat has already seen Carter over the past month on an American lecture tour, and the second half of this year. Syria's Foreign Minister Halim Khaddam was due to arrive in Washington last night to prepare for a meeting.

Carter, who is facing the biggest test yet of his popularity, commented that "transportation consumes 26 per cent of our energy and as much as half of that is waste."

Other proposals which would hit consumers had included a special tax on the large, petrol-hungry cars driven by most Americans and a well-headed tax on domestically-produced oil and natural gas to raise fuel prices for industry and home-heating or air conditioning.

Carter described his plans as "a carefully-balanced program, depending for its fairness on all its major component parts." He urged Congress to weigh each section of it.

But it was already clear that the programme would receive some major reshaping, and it was likely to be months before Congress approves any legislative outline on it.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives, Congressman Thomas (Tip) O'Neill, said the President would have a major battle

BEIRUT. — Phalangist leaders are reportedly complaining that Israel has cut back military aid to Christian forces in southern Lebanon following international pressure to dampen the fighting.

As a result, some Lebanese Christian warlords are reported feeling used and betrayed by Israel, which had been helping them along the border with arms, ammunition and logistics.

"Israel finds nothing wrong in having the guerrillas move into south Lebanon and taking over the area, as long as they don't try to infiltrate across the border," complained an editorial this week in the "Revell," a newspaper close to the rightist Phalange Party. "How can we explain this charitable attitude of Israel toward the men of the Palestine Liberation Organization in south Lebanon?"

A member of the Phalange Party politburo also alleged that Christian militia leaders were refused Israeli air intervention during the terrorist attack on Sabrah and Shatila, two kms. west of added in an interview.

The Israeli reluctance to continue military aid in the south at the level of the last few months, according to western diplomatic observers here, appears to stem from two considerations:

- Christian leaders recently made it clear to Israeli contacts that, at Syrian urging, they must end the overt cooperation with Jerusalem that scandalized much of the Arab world.
- The U.S. has, according to diplomatic sources, brought pressure to bear on Israel to cool the situation in southern Lebanon lest a confrontation with Syria break out.

"There was a hell of a lot of diplomatic arm-twisting on those guys," said a Beirut-based Western diplomat who follows the southern war closely. "This may be a residual effect."

Meanwhile rival Palestinian factions clashed for the second day yesterday, cutting the coastal highway between the ports of Tyre and Sidon.

Pro-Syrian and pro-Iraqi wings of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command fought with heavy machine guns and anti-tank rockets for about 90 minutes, according to soldiers controlling traffic on the road.

They said fighters from other terrorist groups intervened to stop the fighting. (AP, Reuters)

The most concentrated picnic focus yesterday, however, must have been the shores of Lake Kinneret, where the multitudes that had been converging since noon on Wednesday had reached a peak of about 100,000 at noon yesterday. The main attractions were the special toilet- and refuse-collector-equipped camping grounds provided by the JNF and the Lake Authority.

In the morning many of the country's picnickers had a chance to see

On the eve of Independence Day the stands of the marine officers and the shipping companies polarized into irreconcilable positions. Both sides recognized that the future of the merchant marine was at stake, yet neither side would give in.

Meanwhile at two o'clock yesterday afternoon, the American Export Line's big container ship, Export Freedom, left port for Naples, since she had been unable to discharge her cargo. A last-minute plea by the Shippers Council to the Transport Minister, that his Ministry cover the $20,000 a day it costs to keep a ship in port until the strike ends, was not answered.

The sources said that the Soviets pressed Arafat to change the PLO's position regarding the acceptance of Israel, making the point that Israel's existence within the pre-1967 borders was no longer a question.

In revealing this Soviet position, the sources said that the State Department views the current Soviet attitude towards the Middle East conflict as more "moderate" today than in the recent past.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance is known to have raised the question of the Soviets' reluctance to discuss the Israeli-Arab conflict with the Israelis during his visit to Jerusalem last month. But the Soviets apparently said that this would have to be considered within the context of progress at a reconvened Geneva peace conference.

day. Navy frogmen are participating in the search.

The host, which regularly carried sightseers around the sea walls of the old city, was heavily laden with Independence Day visitors. It was returning to the port when it suddenly developed a heavy list.

The passengers, among whom were pregnant women, young children and babies, apparently panicked and ran to the other side of the craft, causing it to capsize. Those who were able to swim managed to clamber up onto the boat's hull, or to support themselves in the water until help came. But a number of people were trapped under the water by the boat's superstructure.

Fishing boats which happened to be in the vicinity, small pleasure craft and navy patrol boats rushed to the rescue of the passengers.

Galilee police commander Nitzav Mishne David Franko and Sgan Nitzav Pessah Perlman, who happened to be on the foreshore at the time, put out the alarm, called ambulances and took injured to hospital for treatment.

One of the survivors, Muhammad Ibrahim, 41, of Acre, told Yim's reporter how he had gone on the cruise with his two-and-a-half-year old son. When the boat capsize, he managed to escape from underneath it and immediately began to search for his son. He found him and stayed afloat biding him for ten minutes until they were rescued.

A large number of survivors were hospitalized, most of them to Nahariya government hospital, which was closed to visitors and surrounded by police and security forces. Doctors and nurses were called out on emergency standby, and some of the rescued were transferred to Haifa's Rambam hospital.

By last night 17 people were still in hospital, most of them being treated for swallowing sea water.

The cause of the disaster is not yet clear, though most eyewitnesses and survivors who have talked to the press agree that the boat was carrying well in excess of the 20 sightseers it was licensed to carry. One report says that at least 35 people were rescued from the water.

WASHINGTON. — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday confirmed the nomination of Samuel Lewis as the next U.S. Ambassador to Israel. The full Senate is expected to follow suit within the next few days.

A quarrel between the Broadcasting Authority and the Israel Defence forces over censorship induced Chief of Staff Rav-Aluf Mordechai Gur to cancel his scheduled Independence Day Eve interview on TV and a live telecast of entertainment at an army base on Wednesday night.

The dispute, which resulted in a walk-out by Gur from a TV studio in Jerusalem on Tuesday shortly before taping, evoked strong and often contradictory statements from the two sides. The IDF spokesman, Tat-Aluf Yoel Ben-Porat, charged TV with violating "long-established practices" and making demands that "run counter to principles of democracy."

The authority spokesman, however, said the authority could not accept screening by the Defence Minister in addition to normal screening by the military censor.

The Jerusalem Post learned last night that the abortive Gur interview was the third within the past year that the Chief of Staff had cancelled. He refused to be interviewed last Independence Day and Yom Kippur, after his request that two correspondents, and not one, conduct the questioning. A month ago, according to sources, Gur was again invited for an interview, this time by a pair of reporters, for broadcast on Independence Day Eve.

At a preliminary meeting at Gur's office, the two interviewers agreed not to ask questions about two sensitive topics. TV sources insist that no mention was made of sending a stenographic record of the interview to Defence Minister Shimon Peres before broadcast. The IDF spokesman, however, maintains that such an agreement was made.

At 10 p.m. on Tuesday, when Gur had arrived in the studio, news director Dan Shilon — disturbed to see army stenographers arriving earlier — told the Chief of Staff that he was willing for the interview to be sent to the army censor as usual, but unwilling for a transcript to be sent to the Defence Minister. He explained that "it has never been our practice to do so," and that such a matter should not be censored by a political figure. (It has been standing practice by all newspapers to send interviews with Many cigarettes claim to be mild... but Smile is different. It's something else. It's the first cigarette in Israel that relieves you of most of the nicotine — while fully enjoying the taste of a superior blend of American tobaccos.

What's Smile's secret?
It can be summed up in one word: ESP. After 5 years of research, "Duhsh" company succeeded in creating a mild, good-tasting cigarette using a special lightweight paper known as ESP with a network of microscopic perforations (see diagram).

Likud 'leadership team' idea seems to have faded

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Likud appears to have dropped its plan to form a "leadership team" which would include the bloc's candidates for ministerial positions.

Liberal leader Shmuel Eshkol told The Jerusalem Post that at a meeting with Herut leader Menachem Begin, who is recuperating from a heart attack, it was decided to make a final decision in ten days time.

But the Likud's campaign manager, Ezer Weisman, said: "We think a leadership team isn't a good idea." He avoided detailing the reasons.

Weisman had proposed, a year ago, to form a shadow government. But party leaders claimed this would be futile because it was not clear which portfolios the Likud would have in a future coalition, nor was there any reason to insult members who would not receive portfolios.

The Likud then decided to form a "leadership team" which would include its candidates for ministerial positions, but the team would not have special authorities within the Likud.

But differences arose within the Liberal Party over who should be in it.

The Likud components, Herut, the Liberals and Le'umi, also disagreed on how many members each should appoint. Le'umi nominated four. The two bigger partners said the team would have to include a total of 20 members to maintain the present balance of power. This would be exaggerated, because the Likud reasonably can expect only four or five ministerial portfolios.

Accordingly, Begin, Eshkol, Weisman, Yitzhak Shamir and Yigal Horowitz decided to form 12 teams, to be presented as the bloc's experts in various fields. The teams will incorporate the first 60 people on the Likud's list of Knesset candidates. Weisman said details will be disclosed next week.

between President Hafez Assad and Carter early next month. Syrian officials say that the Carter-Assad meeting is planned for Geneva on May 9.

Assad is currently on a Soviet tour. A communiqué wrapping up his talks with the Kremlin leaders is scheduled to be announced in Moscow and Damascus tonight.

Assad's talks with Carter will be preceded by a meeting between the American President and Jordan's King Hussein next Monday. The Jordanian monarch is flying to Washington tomorrow to pave the way for what he views to be crucial talks over a turbulent situation in the Middle East. On the eve of his departure to Washington, Hussein warned that the region "is headed straight for a disaster unless serious peace negotiations are started this year."

Jack Maurice writes from Paris: In an interview with "Le Monde," Hussein said yesterday that he was "not optimistic" about peace prospects this year, adding that those who lead Arab public opinion to believe that peace could be established in 1977 are playing with fire. "The explosion threatens to be as widespread as the unfounded hopes which were being built up," he said.

Hussein added: "I have the painful feeling that the Arab Government does not seriously intend to negotiate a peace based on the return of the territories conquered in 1967."

Mas'ha settlement displeases U.S.

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The State Department is not pleased with Israel's decision to authorize the establishment of a civilian settlement at Mas'ha, the first established in Samaria.

Officials here complained that this Israeli decision would prove helpful to the U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace effort. The United States, which has always opposed the establishment of Jewish settlements in territories captured during the Six Day War, claims that such settlements become "obstacles" to the peace process.

American officials said that the settlement at Mas'ha would be a violation of international law, specifically the Geneva Convention governing the foreign occupation of territories.

It was not known whether the United States has registered a formal protest with Israel, although in the past, Washington has always done so whenever an Israeli settlement has been authorized in the territories.

the Chief of Staff to the Defence Minister for review.

Gur then walked out. An Independence Day celebration in an army base in the Golan Heights, on which TV had spent $150,000, was taped for broadcast at a later date but not aired live.

The IDF spokesman explained that the army would not allow any direct broadcasts involving the IDF until "clear, mutually agreed and unequivocal directives" were worked out with the Authority.

The IDF spokesman further stated that "it has been the practice in the IDF that interviews in the media with the Chief of Staff — both the interview itself and what is said in it — require the approval of the political echelon (the Defence Minister)."

The IDF spokesman said that TV director Aaron Zuckerman, following a meeting with the IDF in February, had agreed in writing that "interviews with officers of the rank of colonel and up would require approval by the authorized bodies."

Amlav of the Broadcasting Authority claimed that Zuckerman had only confirmed the receipt of a letter of principles from the IDF, and had not approved them. He added that "authorized bodies" did not refer to the Defence Minister, and that interviews with the Chief of Staff were not included in the discussion. (Leader — page 14)

See how they run

The Labour-Mapam Alignment is doing a little better; the Likud has improved very slightly; the Democratic Movement for Change is slipping.

Such is the analysis of Haneoch Smith, one of the most experienced experts in the business, in a special poll commissioned by "Ma'ariv" and carried out after the upheavals in the Alignment's leadership.

The Alignment's share of the votes went up to 35 per cent on April 13, from 32 per cent in March, which would give it 44 seats in the next Knesset. (It has 49 in the present Knesset.) Smith gave the Likud 29 seats, as against 28 in March. (It has 40 seats in the present Knesset.) He gave DMC 13 seats in the latest poll although it had 15% in March. (DMC is not represented in the present Knesset.)

Smith's poll covered 1,200 Israelis in towns and villages. Seventeen per cent of them said they had not yet made up their minds. Seven per cent refused to take part in the poll.

Defence Minister Shimon Peres, who heads the Alignment list, said in Bat Yam: "If I'm elected Prime Minister, I'll propose to the Cabinet that we submit a peace plan of our own to Washington. We should not wait for an American plan." Peres will stroll through Ashdod today, and through Tel Aviv's Yarkon Park tomorrow.

Golda Meir has agreed to make 10 public appearances on behalf of the Alignment in the election campaign. Minister-without-Portfolio Israel Galili who was bumped from the list, has also decided to take part in the campaign, now that Golda will appear on the hustings.

More major political pronouncements from DMC leader Yigael Yadin. "Before the Hussein-Carter talks begin in Washington we should make it clear to the United States that the solution to the Palestine problem will have to be the final item in negotiations for an overall peace between Israel and her neighbours."

The DMC spokesman has again denied rumours that his party has talked to the Likud about cooperation after the elections. "We shall cooperate with others for principles, not for Cabinet seats," the DMC man declared.

The Alignment reports that elections headquarters chief Haim Bar-Lev had an "emotional experience" on Independence Day. At a meeting with Ramat Gan Labour members 80-year-old Haya Shulsky, mother of the DMC's Meir Amit, came up to Bar-Lev, according to the Alignment spokesman, and said: "I want you to know that I am very ashamed of the things that my son Meir has been saying and doing."

Po'alei Aguda, which just published its platform, would make territorial concessions in Sinai and the Golan in return for true peace, but would not yield anything in Judea and Samaria.

Shelli has bagged two more big name doves for its vote, both Hebrew University professors. They are Yehoshua Arieli (history) and Aryeh Socha (theatre). Shelli leader Uri Avnery played the Democratic Front for Peace and Equality, over attacks on Shelli because of its contacts with PLO personality Dr. Issam Sartawi. Avnery charged: "The New Communists only favour Arab causes when it suits the Soviet Union. They don't like Sartawi because he's U.S.-oriented and not Moscow-oriented."

The Organisation of Tenants in Rent-Controlled Apartments has warned that it will boycott all parties which do not support the tenants' "legitimate interests." The group promised to tell its supporters which parties to vote for in a few days' time. In the next paragraph it thanked the Histadrut for its assistance.

Once again the See-How-They-Run prize goes to Commerce Minister Haim Bar-Lev. Alignment campaign chief. He said in Ashdod: "You can't solve radical problems at election-time because everybody who has the chance grabs the Government by the throat. But after the elections you can cast the situation by fundamental reforms."

Hikiyahu Habra, who won the World Jewish Bible Quiz yesterday, is given a hero's ride on the shoulders of his yeshiva classmates following the competition.

Son of family of 15 wins World Bible Quiz

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Hikiyahu Habra, a shy 17-year-old yeshiva boy from Bnei Brak, was cheered on by his 14 brothers and sisters and by dozens of his classmates yesterday as he won the 14th World Jewish Bible Quiz for Youth in the Jerusalem Theatre.

With amazing recall of Biblical chapter and verse, Hikiyahu maintained Israel's hold of the Bible crown for the third year running with a perfect score of 74 points.

Hikiyahu, the son of Yeshiva immigrants and a student at Rehovot's Yeshivat Hadarom, was followed closely by: David Glat, 15, a rabbi's son, who studies at the Yeshiva University High School in Manhattan (with 73 points); Zvi Hirsch, 16, of Belgium (71 points); Mira Ohever-Shalom, 17, of Givat Washington High School near Ashdod (68.5 points); and Shmuel Goldberger, 18, a pupil at the Toronto Hebrew Academy (67 points).

The 27 contestants (18 boys and 11 girls) from 14 countries had earlier competed with thousands of others in national contests.

The first prize was a large Koran Bible and a set of four silver medals.

As part of the contest's timely theme — the 10th anniversary of Jerusalem's reunification — there were constant references to the Holy City in the questions. The stage backdrop was a painted Jerusalem skyline.

Former Interior Minister Dr. Yosef Burg, who has for years presided over the judges' panel, and Education Minister Aharon Yadin, who was to have awarded the prizes, were absent from yesterday's proceedings. Because candidates for the Knesset are not allowed to appear on TV during the pre-election period, Burg and Yadin were replaced by former IDF Chief Chaplain Aluf Mordechai Piron, and Education Ministry director-general Eliezer Shmuel.

The quiz was organized by the World Jewish Bible Society, with help from Gadna, the Education Ministry and the Jewish Agency.

Israel Prizes awarded to 13

The Independence Day celebrations wound up last night as Education Minister Aharon Yadin handed over the Israel Prize to 13 persons in a ceremony in the Jerusalem Theatre.

Opening the ceremony, which was attended by President Ephraim Katzir, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and other dignitaries, Yadin said it is high time for Israel to calm down after the shocking effects of the Yom Kippur War. "The time has come to sober up from the shock and its dangerous side effects. Truly, not all our dreams were realized... The shape of our society and culture are not exactly the way we dreamed of them." But Yadin added "We must tell ourselves that most of our dreams did come true."

The recipients of the Israel Prize this year are two geographers — Prof. David Amiran and Shmuel Avituv, two historians — Prof. Raphael Mahler and Menachem Stern; Eretz Yisrael researcher Prof. Nahman Avigad; two agricultural researchers — Prof. Zvi Avidov and Dr. Ya'acov Efrat; sculptor Dani Karavan, Israeli Museum officials Eliseva Cohen and Yona Fisher, who got the prize for design, and labourers Esther Levi, Ya'acov Abraham and industrialist Abraham Kalir who got the prize for exemplary service in industry and labour.

Answering for the prize winners Prof. Amiran talked about the problems of coordinating the demands of technology with the environment — his special field of research. Since it is not in our power to change the physical phenomena, we must either coordinate our actions with the environment or pay the cost, Amiran said.

The Israel-made aircraft thundered over Jerusalem at 11.00 a.m. in two diamond-shaped formations, having flown in from Kiryat Shimon in the north, and heading towards settlements in the Arava in the south. The planes did not fly over Eilat.

In the Jerusalem area, every back road and dirt track leading through the forests in the Corridor was lined yesterday from the early hours with cars from the capital bearing picnickers. Those who could not get out of town filled the open spaces inside the city; some were seen picnicking on grassy traffic islands.

The Old City was thronged with visitors, most of them out-of-towners who had driven into town as Jerusalemites were leaving out.

The main official event in the capital yesterday was the official reception in the morning at President Katzir's residence for this year's 100 most outstanding members of the Israel Defence Forces. The 100, who were presented to the President by Chief of Staff Mordechai Gur, include 19 girl soldiers and one Druse.

Wednesday night, in an unprecedentedly forthright Independence Day message to the nation, President Katzir called on Israelis "not to cut off the branch on which we sit" through strikes. Saying "my heart is full of anxiety at the negative phenomena on the labour front — especially the services industries," Katzir called on Israelis to exhibit the same sense of responsibility they show in times of war and danger. Otherwise a "tragedy" was coming for the nation's economy, he said.

Mayor Teddy Kollek's annual Independence Day reception at Jerusalem's Citadel drew the biggest crowd in memory yesterday, including tourists, Arab notables and churchmen. During the day Kollek also had a one-hour meeting with visiting Russian Patriarch Sergei and his delegation, who expressed their "blessings on Jerusalem, its people and the Jewish people on their holiday and all good wishes for the State of Israel." Among the visitors at the Citadel reception was Defence Minister Shimon Peres.

"Jerusalem's Independence Eve drew large crowds downtown, made up in good part of the youthful and tourists. In addition to the live music which drew thousands to the square in front of Beit Aguda, a four-man band atop Cafe Rondo touched off folk dancing in Rehov King George. The holiday pitch-penny operations which have proliferated in the Zion Square area in recent years operated once again without exciting the interest of the police or municipality.

Tel Aviv Hapoel, Maccabi share tennis honours

By JACK LEON, Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter
RAMAT HASHARON — Tel Aviv Hapoel and Maccabi yesterday shared the honours in the finals of the Israel Lawn Tennis Association's fifth annual Independence Day Youth Shield at the Tennis Centre here. Hapoel's boys won 3-0, while the Maccabi girls triumphed by the same score.

The event, which started last September with a country-wide entry of nearly 50 clubs, honours the memory of 28 local tennis players who have died in action since 1948. The prize were awarded by Colonel Eli Yaniv, IDF physical education inspector.

Shai Puni spearheaded the success of Hapoel's boys, with a brilliant 3-0, 5-3, 7-5 victory over the favoured Shlomo Glickstein, and his teammates Zohar Ben-Rey beat Ronny Wertheimer 7-5, 6-0. In the doubles, Puni and Moshe Bergman came through 7-6, 6-4 against Ronny Stemp and Wertheimer.

Maccabi's Hagit Traubart and Hava Coriat likewise emerged with a 100 per cent record in the girls' event, the former defeating Tami Levin 6-0, 6-4, and Coriat beating Dalia Stoltz by the same score. The four girls were also engaged in the doubles, with Traubart and Coriat winning 7-6, 6-1.

"Best Sportsman" awards went to the boys of Tel Aviv ASA and the girls of Kibbutz Dan.

Winners of the Rehovot Municipality's second annual Independence Day tennis championships were: men — Dany Blaser, boys' 18 — Kobi Meitner; boys' 15 — Haim Gitter; boys' 14 — Amit Naor; women — Mira Berkowitz; mens' over-45 — Mordechai Parnes.

Wheelchair hoopers back from triumph

BEN-GURION AIRPORT (Him) — Israel's wheelchair basketball team, winners on Monday of the European Cup, were greeted by a large crowd of admirers here on Tuesday night on their return from the Netherlands. Their arrival had been a bit delayed, as airport authorities removed them from the terminal following rumours of an attempt to attack them.

The team won all seven of its matches. Coach Shlomo Har-Zvi said all members of the team had played during the tour.

RUGBY — The Dudi Silbowitz seven-side men's rugby tournament, named in honour of Yitzhak Rabin, was postponed last weekend because the kibbutz sports field was waterlogged.

Memorial Day speeches express Israel's desire for peace, readiness to defend

Jerusalem Post Staff
 The memory of the nation's war dead was honoured at ceremonies throughout the country Tuesday night and Wednesday morning. Memorial gatherings were held at military cemeteries and memorials, in cities, towns, villages, kibbutzim and moeshavim.

Ceremonies on Wednesday commenced at 11 a.m., on the sounding of the siren. Work in offices, factories and shops came to a halt, cars stopped and drivers got out to stand in the road with bowed heads, until the sound of the siren dwindled.

President Ephraim Katzir took part in the memorial ceremony outside Jerusalem's Binyanei Ha'Ooma on Wednesday morning, when, accompanied by Mayor Teddy Kollek, he inspected a guard of honour at the Memorial Pillar. The guard was composed of veteran underground fighters and young Gadna members.

Speaking at the Har Herzl ceremony in the Capital on Wednesday morning, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told bereaved parents and relatives: "Every inch of the soil of our land is soaked in the blood of our heroic sons. Every part of our country is filled with the glorious deeds of the young lions of Israel, who gave their lives in our struggle for existence."

If a common theme emerged from the many addresses given by government representatives at the widely-scattered assemblies, it was that Israel wants peace — but is ready, if need be, to defend herself against aggression.

It emerged with dramatic clarity in Defence Minister Shimon Peres' speech on Wednesday morning. "They (the fallen) did not ask for war — they demanded peace. But when war was forced upon them, they won the victory."

They left us our land fortified in the face of attack and open to every possibility of negotiation for peace, Peres told assembled mourners and dignitaries at Tel Aviv's Kiryat Shaul cemetery. Foreign Minister Yigal Allon told the assembly on Jerusalem's Mount Scopus that Israel must be prepared for the possibility of war, though she wanted peace.

At the military section of the Rehovot cemetery, Police Minister Shlomo Hillel told bereaved families, "Despite the great sacrifices we have made, the pain and the many disappointments, we do not tire of holding out our hands in peace."

Tourism Minister Moshe Kol, speaking at the Hof Ha'Azrael military cemetery in Haifa, said Israel must continue to make herself independent of the strength of others. The plight of the Christians of Southern Lebanon, and the way they had been abandoned by the rest of the Christian world, proved this. But Israel must go on repeating and stressing that her face is turned towards peace, not to further wars.

At the military cemetery in Isefiyeh, Commerce Minister Bar-Lev addressed a gathering in honour of the Druse who have fallen in the defence of the state.

The twilight transition on Wednesday night between Memorial Day and Independence Day was marked — as it has been for the past 18 years — by a ceremony atop Jerusalem's Mount Herzl. Under the patronage of Knesset Speaker Yisrael Yeshayahu, this year's ceremony was dedicated to the tenth anniversary of Jerusalem's liberation and unification. Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek was seated at Yeshayahu's right hand as guest of honour. Also with the speaker were O.C. Central Command Aluf Yona Eilat and the commanding officer of Jerusalem.

After the ceremony honouring Israel's war dead, the national flag was raised, against a background of songs and poems about Jerusalem — a combined choir, composed of the God Girls' Choir and the Choir of the Military Chaplaincy, sang "Lema'an Tilon Lo Eshaneh" (for the sake of Zion I will not hold my peace) 13 torches representing the 12 tribes of Israel were lit by persons integrally involved with Jerusalem's past and the city's liberation.

Lighting the torches were: Yael Meyuhav, whose family has been in the city for 13 generations; Yerahmiel Ezyon of the Hagana; Yosef Avni, a veteran of the I.Z.L.; Ben-Zion Avni, who commanded the Civil Guard in Jerusalem during the War of Independence; Dani Beit Hamikdash (Zvi Shoham) who fought with Lehi; Moshe Mishol of the Jewish Quarter; Ya'acov Saliman who was a commander with the Etzioni Brigade; Aviva Kaplan who served with the Harel Brigade of the Palmach; Yossi Ohana who served with the Jerusalem Brigade during the Six Day War; Amos Gol of the 56th Paratroop Brigade which took the Old City in 1967; Elided Avidar of the Harel Armoured Brigade — who also is a bereaved parent and who lit the flame in memory of all those who have fallen in Israel's wars; and Sigal Almog, a young resident of the Jewish Quarter in the Old City, who was born on the same day that Jerusalem was liberated.

After the moving ceremony, the State and IDF Colours were handed over by a contingent of the Northern Command to the Air Force.

The 50-minute ceremony ended with a brilliant fireworks display which signalled the thousands waiting in and around the Jerusalem Hills that Independence Day had officially started, and that they could light their traditional bonfires.

MARZOUK, AZAR FUNERALS
 The two Israeli agents whose bodies were returned from Egypt Tuesday after 22 years, will be buried with full military honours at the Mount Herzl Military Cemetery in Jerusalem at 1.30 Sunday afternoon.

The two, Rav-Seren Dr. Moshe Marzouk and Rav-Seren Shmuel Azar, were hanged by the Egyptians in 1955, on charges of being Israeli operatives and of organising sabotage groups in Egypt.

Their bodies were repatriated together with those of nine unidentified soldiers who fell in the Yom Kippur War.

A number of visitors paid their respects on Memorial Day at adjacent graveyards in Jerusalem's Mt. Herzl military cemetery. Chief of Staff David Elazar and S'gan-Aluf Yonatan Yahu, leader of the Entebbe rescue force, who was the only officer to fall in action during the past year.

Most harmful testimony given at Majdanek trial

By BRIAN ARTHUR, Jerusalem Post Correspondent
 — For the first time since it was opened in 1961, the Majdanek trial in Israel heard testimony from a witness who had been a prisoner in the camp. The witness, a Polish inmate Jan Novak, gave favourable evidence about another accused, August Reinartz. They said they had never seen Reinartz mistreat a prisoner in the two years he worked with them as an assistant in the sick ward.

A total of 14 former staff members at the camp face charges in what is probably the last of the major war crimes trials in West Germany. The trial has come under repeated criticism both in Germany and abroad for the slow pace at which it is proceeding.

Majdanek, which was located near Lublin in Poland, was a major link in the Nazis' system of death camps.

Much of the testimony to date has been from former camp officials who are not defendants but who, for fear of incriminating themselves, claim they either did not see any crimes committed or cannot recall them.

Music review

Conductor both disappoint

JERUSALEM SYMPHONY — The 55th season of the orchestra, conducted by Nikita Magaloff, opened on Tuesday night with a performance of the "Fantasy" by Liszt. The orchestra, which is now under the baton of the Russian conductor, gave a performance that was both disappointing and encouraging.

The conductor's sense of tempo was erratic in the "Fantasy" but was behind the beat, in contrast to the "Eroica", where he often, quite reasonably, raised the orchestra in order to get a better effect.

His interpretation of the Third Symphony was open to serious criticism: he never neglected to make even the slightest accent appear very important and heavy (the rather shrill trumpets had a field-day), melodic lines were emotionally over-stressed.

Poses does not seem to bother about balance within the different groups in the orchestra. Since he seems interested only in giving a personal performance of the music, he leaves the musicians without direction or control, satisfied that all the notes are in the right place.

But, if Lukas Foss is not a conductor for musicians, he surely makes a great impression on the audience. He received such a tremendous ovation at the end of the concert that he felt impelled to give an encore, a song by Beethoven (Rueckert's "The Heavens Fraught"). Johannes Brahms

New "Fluent Biblical and Modern Hebrew" classes start May 22

American Ulpian, Israel's largest language school, is launching its new "Fluent in Biblical and Modern Hebrew" classes on May 22 in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Herzliya and Haifa. This new series was developed especially for English speakers. Students learn by the most sophisticated linguistic method yet devised to read with (the Bible) and out (newspapers) vowel and consonant sounds and to speak colloquial Hebrew. Complete transcripts are provided. The author, Robert Goldfarb, an American living in Bivun, states that monolingual English speakers will learn as much Hebrew in 4 weeks as they would in 29 weeks at a full-time residential ulpan. Full-time ulpan students can prove for themselves the effectiveness of this new series in one month (16 lessons) for IL76.00, half the regular tuition. Reception hours: USALEM: 1 Shalom Street, Zion Square, 4:00-8:00 p.m. FA: 13 Blauk Street, 2nd Floor, 4:00-8:00 p.m. AVIV: 168 Dizengoff Street, 9:00-11:30 a.m. and 4:00-8:00 p.m. ZLIYA: Sharon Hotel, Monday and Wednesday, 4:00-8:00 p.m.

Fluksman's wife free to leave, for IL240,000

TEL AVIV (Him) — Rivka Fluksman — whose husband, former Labour Party functionary Meir Fluksman, reportedly left the country hurriedly when the Yadin affair broke five months ago — was on Wednesday released on IL240,000 bond.

Mrs. Fluksman, who claimed she was being kept in Israel as a hostage for her husband, was also allowed to reclaim her passport. In return for an additional IL40,000 bond. But Tel Aviv Magistrate Arye Evenari ordered her not to remain abroad for more than six weeks.

(The police want to question Meir Fluksman about various aspects of financial malfeasance connected with former Kipat Holim head Asher Yadin, now serving a five-year term for bribe-taking and fraud. They do not expect Fluksman to return to Israel, and say the couple's 12-year-old daughter has already been sent abroad to join her father.)

After Mrs. Fluksman took court action to recover her passport, police told the court that she was suspected of possessing stolen paintings, one of which had been given to Yadin as a bribe. They said she was also thought involved in other matters connected with the Yadin affair.

However, they made no objection on Wednesday to her release at high bond in order to go abroad for a limited time.

SS man prefers Dutch jail to trial in Israel

AMSTERDAM (JTA) — Former SS concentration camp guard Johannes Løyen has withdrawn his appeal against a life sentence imposed by a Dutch court to prevent the possibility of being extradited to Israel.

Løyen's attorneys planned to appeal his sentence at the Dutch Supreme Court on the grounds that a Dutch court was not competent to try him, since by entering the SS he formally lost his Dutch citizenship. Israel has already submitted a request for Løyen's extradition and should Løyen have won the appeal he could have been extradited. It appears that Løyen preferred a life sentence in Holland to re-trial in Israel.

Police questioning 50 youths from Ramat Hasharon on drugs

RAMAT HASHARON (Him) — Police are questioning some 50 minors from Ramat Hasharon on suspicion that they smoked hashish and are trying to get to the roots of a ring of pushers that supplied drugs to pupils in the Ramat Hasharon high school.

Worried members of the school's parents committee met on Wednesday with the head of the Ramat Hasharon local council and Nissav Moshe Tlomkin, the Tel Aviv District commander of police, to hear about the investigation on drug abuses among minors in their town. Tlomkin reassured the parents that reports on Israel Radio that some 400 of the schools' 1,300 pupils are suspected of smoking hashish are inaccurate. In fact, he said, police are questioning some 50 youngsters of whom 37 study at the Ramat Hasharon school.

Tlomkin said the publicity surrounding the case only made it more difficult to find the pushers and told the parents that his force is doing its best to control the problem.

A member of the team investigating the case told a Tel Aviv Magistrate on Wednesday that several minors and soldiers from Herzliya and the north Dan region are evading police who wish to question them on the Ramat Hasharon drugs case. A police representative gave details of the investigation while asking Magistrate Arye Evenari to remand a 17-year-old suspected of supplying drugs to minors.

The policeman said he had reports of a flat where minors from Ramat Hasharon and Herzliya gathered for parties where they smoke hashish. Police had searched several of the youths' homes but so far had found only minute quantities of drugs.

Byzantine monastery revealed at Ma'ale Adumim

By ABRAHAM BARNOVICH, Jerusalem Post Reporter
MA'ALE ADUMIM — In a vaulted chamber pierced by light from a small opening out in the roof, the skeletons of several hundred monks lay on top of each other, three or four deep, separated by thin layers of dirt.

They have lain that way in neat rows for something like 16 centuries waiting for resurrection. Their burial chamber was recently discovered by Dr. Yannis Melmaris, a young Greek archaeologist who speaks Hebrew and Arabic and who is excavating the site on behalf of the archaeology section of the West Bank Military Government and the Israel Antiquities Department.

From a distance merely an indistinct ruin at the bottom of a shallow bowl in the Judean Desert, the site was in Byzantine times a Jewish monastery filled on Sundays by hundreds of monks who spent the rest of the week alone in surrounding caves.

It had been founded in the Fifth Century by a monk from Asia Minor named Euthymius and a nomad chieftain-turned-Christian from Persia named Petrus. Euthymius came first in the year 405, Dr. Melmaris said during a press tour Tuesday. He lived alone in a cave for a few years before moving on to lonelier hermitages in the desert including Masada.

He returned in 426 and three years later with the assistance of Petrus built the monastery which served as the focus of a laura, or community of hermit monks, who would gather there once a week. After his death, it became known as the Monastery of St. Euthymius.

One of the monks in Euthymius' laura was Saba, who went on to found what is perhaps the most famous of the desert monasteries, Mar Saba.

The Monastery of St. Euthymius was destroyed by the Persians in 614 and rebuilt only to be devastated again by an earthquake in 699. It ceased functioning as a monastery the following century. The Arabs call the site Khan El Ahmar.

Although the site was initially probed by archaeologists during the British mandate, some 50 years ago, Melmaris said British archaeological officials to whom he had written were unable to find details of that expedition's findings. Below ground level, Melmaris found three adjacent chambers. At one end was the original cave Euthymius had inhabited. Next to it was a small burial chamber for the leaders of the monastery with a narrow space in the centre which, the archaeologist believes, had held the body of Euthymius himself. At the far end, hidden by a slab, was the entrance to a large burial chamber holding the remains of the monks who had died there over the years.

On the surface, the archaeologist exposed the stone inlaid floor of a church with elaborate geometric designs. He also discovered a stone inscription mentioning the name Petrus, apparently confirming the existence of the nomad chief mentioned in ancient church histories.

Hard climb up (for women) inside the foreign service

MATIC offensive is under at the Foreign Ministry for too few women, allowing little responsibility, and an almost no opportunity in political jobs. The Minister's Committee of Women has recently a paper labelling the Ministry as the second employment of women. The May 1976 indicate that try for Religious Affairs on the list, with only four of the top-grade positions women. no "foreign" credit for service abroad.

Furthermore, the report states, many secretaries carry out jobs which, when performed by men, are called "office manager," "assistant," or some such title. The only compensation given to secretaries is the opportunity to take a vacation and work in the "private market." The dead-end situation creates unnecessary bitterness, the report states, and deprives the Foreign Ministry of potential reserves of talent.

Some women have jumped the barriers — but decisions in their cases were arbitrary. The fact that they have proved themselves to be reliable administrators is a further argument for making all women eligible for advancement.

A list of Foreign Ministry employees shows that of the top three grades abroad (ambassador, minister, minister-counsellor) none of the 70 positions is filled by a woman. Of the 88 administrative workers abroad (secretaries, coders, etc.) only 17 are women. These theoretically comprise the reserves for further administrative advancement — but the reserves are slim.

Of the 17 cadets accepted last year, only two were women. The previous year four out of 15 were women. Again, the Committee claims, no reserves are established, and women as diplomats are recognized mainly when they present their credentials from other countries in Jerusalem.

Even the wives of diplomats going abroad are not given the benefit of briefings made available to their husbands — another situation which is both frustrating for the woman going abroad, and a waste of potential personnel — even unofficial — for the Ministry.

Finally, the report points out, Israel has only two women participants in delegations to the United Nations or to its related organizations, which "impairs Israel's image as a progressive state in which the status of women is a serious matter."

A spokesman for the Foreign Ministry pointed out that Minister Yigal Alon, to whom the letter of protest was addressed, had been occupied with other problems recently. He promised that the Manpower Division would have an answer "in a few days."

Meanwhile, he pointed out, there had been two new appointments to political positions: Lea Sidis is the new deputy head of the African Division and Gitta Ampaz is to go as First Secretary to the Embassy in Ottawa.

APRIL is the truest month, according to Eliot, and this dictum certainly applies to those television favourites who have kept us interested and identified through the winter. They have to go: The Hammond brothers disappear, to struggle with their financial, labour and women problems without our knowledge about how they are coping; we cease our pursuit of treasure: Colombo, Macmillan, and MacLoud have gone; watchers of Jordan can no longer see police woman Anderson, the Last of the Baskets, the Pallisers. New faces come in with the spring: Charlie's Angels, Kingston, Robin Hood. Who remembers even the names of the heroes of three or four years ago? Ah, where are the enows of yesterday?

These pensive reflections about the April mortality of faces in the box bring me to one of Gillon's laws that I laid down some years ago: since the introduction of the age of television, no leader in a democratic country can last more than half-a-dozen years. Even those who are re-elected for second terms, like Johnson and Nixon, rapidly lose their ratings and go off the air when the blossom is on the bough. In the good old days, a Gladstone, a Ben-Gurion, or a Statu could spend almost an entire lifetime holding the reins of power. Today we look on their faces night after night for a few years, and then — out and off.

All kinds of reasons are found for the changes of political programming in the spring, but I put it all down to television. A sudden reaction against seeing the same face too often precipitates an inquiry into this or that. The latest victim of the desire to change in April, is poor Yitzhak Rabin, whose handsome face will be only one in the crowd from now onwards, will no longer dominate the screen night after night as it has done now for three years. We are going to miss him, just as we miss Moshe Dayan and Golda and some of the other old-time stars.

It is true that they appear from time to time, these former bright lights of the screen, and we give them pleased and startled recognition. Like we did to Jose Ferrer and Ricardo Montalban in "The Aquarians" on Saturday night, to Noah Beery in Rockford, to Barbara Stanwyck in "The Big Valley." Yitzhak need not despair; sometimes the public does want to see a revival of an old series.

What advice should he give to Shimon Peres or whoever is to take over from Yitzhak? The obvious suggestion would be that he should avoid over-exposure on the box. Somebody from England told me that Harold Wilson, realising the force of my law, tried to cut down on his TV appearances, and so was able to stay in power for the longest period of any politician in the Western world since TV took over the running of our lives. On the other hand, Shimon should not go to the other extreme of such under-exposure that we viewers will say to each other, "Who's he?" But there is little danger of that happening, is there?

THE NEW summer programmes on Israel and Jordan promise to give us some entertaining hours. About "Charlie's Angels" I shall reserve judgement, except about their looks. They even put lovely Diana Muldaur in the shade, no mean feat, although she was of course acting the part of an oppressed trull, exploited by a villain. Having three heroines made it somewhat difficult to follow who was who, and what was happening to whom, but this problem will no doubt be solved as we get used to the faces involved.

It was a gracious act on the part of Jordan Television to bring us a movie, "Public Eye," featuring Haim Topol. I hope that we can look on this as another friendly gesture, indicating a desire on King Hussein's part to have cultural exchanges with the Israelis.

When I watch the Jordan news in Hebrew and English, it strikes me that the announcers are getting very schizophrenic in their desire to appear to be impartial: often when they talk about the president or the prime minister or the minister of defence, it sounds as if they are talking about their people, whereas in fact they are talking about ours. I can see their problem: so much more happens to our stars than to theirs, who seem to have very little to do except to see the king off at the airport and to welcome him back, or to talk to trade and other delegations. Our people do all kinds of dramatic things, like being caught out committing crimes. So we are gradually taking over all the Jordanian air time. What with this objective coverage of Israel news, and the excellent habit of finishing every programme with a sports item, Jordan news is providing stern competition for Israel's.

ARCHIE BUNKER was supreme this week; seldom have I laughed so much as at his efforts to ensure for his grandson a place in heaven, despite the atheism of Meathead. I was somewhat surprised to hear him say that un baptised Jews can be admitted to heaven by some device: I would have thought that his idea of heaven would be a place in which there would be no ethics other than WASPs. Certainly my own heaven will have no place for Archie, despite my admission that I have changed my mind about his capacity to amuse us.

His refusal to surrender his old clothes for the church jumble sale reminds me of a remark of a friend, when somebody came collecting jumble for a sale for some good cause. Drawing herself up to her full height, she answered proudly, "I wear my jumble!"

"SECOND LOOK" was devoted this week to the long tussle between Mordechai Ben Ari of El Al and Moti Hod of Cargo Air Lines Ltd., Ben

Ari is a pleasant, unaggressive man, and nobody admires El Al as much as I do, but his case seemed almost indefensible, except in Israel. Israel is the only country which enshrines the principle that everyone is entitled to his parnassa (livelihood) irrespective of the public good, where competition is treated as unhealthy, and monopoly is thought to be the best means of reducing prices. Every Israeli grocer knows that he is entitled to be the only store in the street; and, if the number of his customers declines as a result of poor services, he is justified in raising his prices to those customers who remain loyal, so as to ensure that his parnassa goes up.

There seems to be no reason at all why sending farm products by air from Israel to Europe should cost four times what it costs to send such products from Mexico. As one farmer maintained, I for one cannot see why El Al, a Government company, should always end up in the black, instead of living on subsidies, like some international airlines and many Israeli Government companies.

Besides, the strange case of the charters makes El Al's position highly suspect. For years they provided to us, with formidable statistics and expert opinions, that charters could never work. Lo and behold, where they are permitted, they are working, and tourist figures are booming as a result. It is hard to see why the success of our agriculture in breaking into European markets should be limited to keep El Al happy.

If El Al as a company seems to be trying to feather its nest as at the expense of the country, what are we to say about members of its staff, who are endangering our life with the world to pry a few extra pounds out of the public purse? The sea captains are even more loathsome. I am proud to be a journalist: we patriotic newsmen never go on strike, perhaps because we are hitched to the engineers, and leave the striking to them.

THE Youth Programme was very good this week, with a marvellous nature film about snakes, scorpions and spiders, all of which creature bore a marked resemblance to the sea captains we had seen on the news. Two psychologists were on hand to explain why we fear these charming little reptiles and insects. I was reminded of Jim, the imprisoned slave in "Huckleberry Finn," and Tom Sawyer's efforts to convince him that he should learn to love creeping, crawling things, so as to accord with romantic tradition. Jim found it very hard to believe that he should ask snakes to kiss him, and put their heads in his mouth, I felt much the same — I don't need any psychologist to tell me why I could never learn to adore those lovable little pets we saw in action.

(Deuteronomy 6:5). Rabbi Eliezer says: If it is said "with all your being," why is it also said "with all your goods"; and if "with all your goods," why also "with all your being"? Because if someone loves his being more than his goods, he is reminded to love God with his being as well; and if someone loves his goods more than his being, he is reminded to love God with his goods as well.

Rabbi Akiva says: "With all your being" — even though God takes your life.

The Sages taught: Once the Romans prohibited the Jews to study Torah, on pain of death. Pappos ben Yehuda found Rabbi Akiva openly teaching Torah to groups, and he said to him: Akiva, don't you fear the government?

Rabbi Akiva replied: A fox walking along the riverbank saw schools of fish darting about, and asked them: Where are you running?

They replied: We're trying to avoid the nets that people spread for us.

This fox said: Why don't you come up on dry land, and you and I will live side by side the way our ancestors used to?

They said: And you're called the cleverest of all animals! You're not clever at all; you're a fool. If we live in fear when we're in our element, how much worse off will we be on dry land!

Rabbi Akiva added: It is the same with us. If this is the way things are when we are busy with Torah, which is our "life...and length of days" (Deuteronomy 30:20), how much worse will it be for us if we forsake Torah!

Soon after, the Romans arrested Rabbi Akiva and Pappos and put them in the same prison. Rabbi Akiva asked Pappos: Why are you here?

Pappos replied: Fortunately — are you, Rabbi Akiva, knowing that you are berserk about the Torah; woe to Pappos for being here for trivial infractions of the law.

When Rabbi Akiva was to be executed, it was the time of the saying of the Shema ("Hear, O Israel, God is our God, God is one"). The Romans combed his body with an iron barrow, while he recited the Shema. His disciples said to him: Master, even now are you capable of reciting the Shema? He said: All my life I wondered whether I would ever have the privilege of serving God "with all your being" — even though God takes your life. Now that the opportunity has come my way, shall I not seize it? (Berachot 61a).

BEN ZOMA says: Who is strong? One who controls his urges, as said (Proverbs 16:32): "Better is one who is slow to anger than a fighter, and one who governs his temper than a conqueror of cities" (Avot 4:1).

By PAUL WEBSTER
PARIS (OHA). — The legal battle over Pablo Picasso's fabulous legacy, officially estimated to be worth 1,124 million francs, has ended after four years marked by tragedy, humour, bitterness and reconciliation that have finally united the heirs as a limited company.

A happy ending in which his widow, six descendants and the French Government will share the most valuable artistic heritage in history would probably have surprised the painter. Maliciously, he refused to leave a will, recognise his natural children or even see his grandchildren.

It has taken seven lawyers, aided nearly full-time by most of the heirs, to sort out and value the 1,385 paintings, 7,089 drawings, 1,228 sculptures, 3,222 ceramics and more than 30,000 sketches, engravings and notebooks, which the painter left behind in his three castles and two houses in France.

The problem facing lawyers at the start was sorting out Picasso's complicated love life. He was married first in 1918 to Olga Khokhlova whose son Paulo is the father of two of the inheritors, Marina (27) and Bernhard (17) by two different wives. Paulo died in 1975, two years after Pablo Picasso, and his children have inherited his share of the fortune. The painter later lived with Marie-Thérèse Walter who gave birth to Maia in 1938. Then came his best known relationship, the long love affair with Françoise Gilot who is the mother of Claude (30) and Paloma (28). Finally, in 1961 he married Jacqueline Roque, now 61, who has no children.

Jacqueline, sure of her heritage, is the only one of his descendants who has not been directly involved in the long legal fight which has been overshadowed from the first few weeks after Pablo Picasso's death in 1973 by the death of his legitimate grandchild Pablo at the age of 24. Pablo, Pablo's son by his own first marriage, was refused the right to pay homage to the painter at his funeral because of quarrels in the family. He went home, drank himself and died after three months of agony.

There is no doubt that this tragedy has played an important part in the settlement which has dragged through several courts, where the natural children were given retrospective recognition despite initial opposition from the legitimate heirs. Enormous concessions have been mutually made to avoid lasting bitterness, one of which involved ten million francs.

Until Picasso died, none of the heirs really knew each other and their attitudes were largely dictated by the painter's impatience with most of his family and his acrimony caused by Françoise Gilot's autobiography of her life with him. Since his death, they have met individually or in groups in lawyers' offices in each others' homes in Paris and the south of France or in the five secret bank vaults where the fabulous treasure is kept. They were first photographed together publicly when they went to identify 119 paintings recovered after a theft at Avignon in 1976.

More poignantly they have met regularly in the five homes which marked Picasso's life and particularly La Californie at Cannes which Picasso left 15 years before his death and Notre Dame de Vie at Mougins, where Jacqueline lives.

It is in his homes where the eccentricity of Picasso is almost a living souvenir. The painter could not throw anything away. At La Californie, left exactly as it was when Picasso walked out, his tooth brush was still in the bathroom next to a Bregue painting wrapped in newspaper. In a drawer there was the paper of a parcel he received in 1912 next to the original manuscript of France's best known humorous play Ubu Roi.

The constant discovery of unknown Picasso works has overturned every inventory made of his output which already went to 31 volumes for his painting alone. As many as 17 signed copies of what were considered to be unique engravings have been discovered.

In touch with the Socialists

LONDON LETTER
Mark Segal

LONDON. — Yoram Peri has just completed two and half years as European representative of the Israel Labour Party. From his base here, he travelled constantly throughout Europe, maintaining contacts with the Socialist parties.

The role of 35 year old Peri in deepening these contacts should not be underestimated, especially in view of the fact that two-thirds of European governments have Socialist ministers of varying degrees of influence. Even in countries like France, Italy and Sweden where the Socialists are in opposition, they play a major political role.

The European representative of the Labour Party is in a position to establish informal relations of invaluable importance to Israel. Europeans are highly protocol-conscious and once policies have been adopted, it is a laborious process to seek to modify them through the bureaucratic pipelines of Foreign Ministries. Thus informal contacts through party channels can influence the policy makers before the official apparatus starts gestating the decisions.

Thus in England where the Labour Party's National Executive Committee has a markedly independent status vis-a-vis the Labour Government, Peri was able to lobby among Labour MPs during discussions on arms supplies to Saudi Arabia, including the Jaguar jets. It was then that the party's international committee hound the government's hands by demanding prior consultation on such matters.

Peri's contacts with Sweden's ex-Premier Olaf Palme brought the latter to intervene with Idi Amin over the fate of the late Dora Bloch — although regrettably too late. Similarly, Peri's connections made it possible for him to lobby with cabinet ministers in various countries and their parties' secretaries-general in order to influence the drafting of Middle East resolutions just prior to last year's Socialist International congress in Geneva.

Peri's particular contribution during his term has been to bring about Israel's acceptance as an observer at the Standing Conference of Socialist Parties in the EEC and with the Socialist faction at the European Parliament. He also established good contacts with the Spanish Socialist Party, at the outset of his term here, when it was still underground. He discovered Enrique Mijuela Herxog, number two in the Spanish party, who comes from the Basque region, where his Jewish mother took refuge from Nazism in the 1940s. Herxog's visit to Israel turned him into a convinced supporter.

If among the older generation of European Socialists, Israel still benefits from its old pioneering aura, the young have been more impressed by the Palestinian underground image which Arab propaganda has so successfully employed. It is on this issue that the Israel Labour Party and her European Socialist sisters continue to diverge.

Bitter battle of Jewish newspapers

LOS ANGELES LETTER

negotiations followed, conducted well out of public sight, but so far no agreement has been reached and battle lines appear to be hardening.

Some months ago, the Federation took to the offensive by announcing that it would spice up and broaden its parochial content by covering national and international news, drawing mainly on reports from the Jewish Telegraphic Agency and the Jerusalem Post. Recently, the "Bulletin" was converted from a monthly to a bi-weekly publication and will probably go weekly in the future.

The really crucial decision taken by the "Bulletin," however, was to accept and solicit commercial advertisements, the financial lifeblood of the independent papers. Even in as large and wealthy a Jewish community as Los Angeles, advertising dollars are not unlimited and in the battle for ads, the "Bulletin" is flexing some powerful muscles.

It is, first of all, backed by the one institution representing the entire organized Jewish community. Furthermore, the "Bulletin" is sent, free of charge, to every contributor to the annual fund drive, and on this basis claims a circulation of 70,000, considerably higher than the combined circulation of the three independents.

So far, the Federation's "Bulletin" is moving gingerly to avoid a public fight. It maintains that it has no desire to eliminate the independents and that it is not soliciting ads from businessmen already patronizing the three other papers. The latter claim is roundly ridiculed by the publishers of the independents, who are now counter-attacking, although too riven by personal and professional antagonisms to present a united front.

The hardest line is being taken by Joseph J. Cummins, publisher of the "Messenger" and a wealthy attorney. He no longer prints the flood of news releases and photos emanating from the Federation's public relations office and in the process has made the "Messenger" a somewhat livelier publication. Cummins has written a number of vitriolic editorials attacking the Federation leadership and threatens to establish a rival community fundraising agency, the Independent Jewish Charities of Greater Los Angels, unless the Federation starts "behaving" itself. The publishers of the other papers continue to support the role and activities of the Federation.

Herb Brin of "Heritage" strongly criticized the "Bulletin" for its expansion, while "Jahaz and Will" is printing a series of "bulletin" balanced investigative reports.
